Hearing-date tracking and case briefs in English and Marathi for district court advocates

Tareekh Labs

The problem

What's broken today

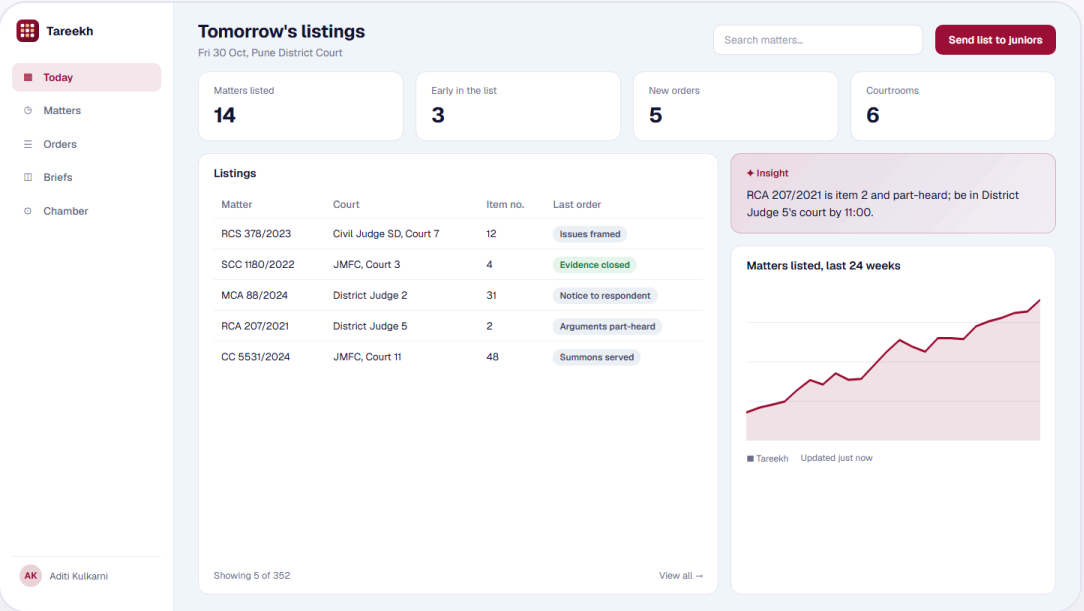

Advocates in Maharashtra's district courts track dozens of matters by reading daily cause lists, often PDFs posted late the evening before, and a missed listing can mean a dismissal for non-prosecution. Juniors spend the first two hours of each day going through cause lists and photocopied orders, many in Marathi, to work out which matters moved and why.

Our solution

Tareekh

Tareekh pulls the published cause lists and orders each evening, matches them to each advocate's matters, and sends a summary by 9 pm with courtroom, item number and the last order in two lines. It reads Marathi and English orders, drafts a one-page brief of each case's hearing history, and flags matters likely to be called early in the day.

Insight

Costs of ₹2,000 must be paid before 13 Nov or the interim stay may not be continued.

Why now

The timing

District courts now publish cause lists and orders online every day, and language models finally read Marathi legal text well enough to summarise orders accurately.

Market

India has well over a million enrolled advocates, most in small chambers outside the metros; we start with the roughly 90,000 practising in Maharashtra's district and taluka courts.

Tareekh Labs

How we make money

Free for individual advocates with up to 20 matters, ₹799 a month for unlimited matters and briefs, and chamber plans at ₹4,500 a month for up to ten lawyers.

The ask

What we're raising

Raising US$450K pre-seed to reach 10,000 advocates and 400 paid chambers by 2027

- Add Hindi and Gujarati orders and courts in two more states
- Hire 2 engineers and a legal content reviewer
- Onboarding sessions with district bar associations
